Supporting learning at home during COVID-19

Context

We've started to learn more about parents' experiences navigating home learning, preventing learning loss, and gauging what they need from schools and districts during the COVID-19 pandemic. Our goal is to provide parents with resources they need and share our insights about their experiences to inform your work as you help support families across the country.

Findings

During our most recent survey of GreatSchools.org users (n=3,646), we discovered the following:

Parents continue to look for learning resources:

- 59% of parents we surveyed on our content pages are using GreatSchools.org as a source for at-home learning materials.
- 14% of parents we surveyed are using GreatSchools.org as a source for ways to help them support their child's emotional well-being, too.

When we asked parents why they were looking for resources:

- 20% of parents indicated that they have not received any resources from their schools.
- 39% of parents indicated that they have received resources from their schools, but are looking for more.

Findings

We asked parents what type of resources they find most helpful:

- 52% of parents indicated a preference for printed/printable materials.
- 20% of parents prefer online resources.
- 20% of parents are interested in a way to understand reading/math level to assess whether their child is “on-track”.
