Fridge fun

Where to start: Comparing and contrasting two things in writing is an important new skill. Start by choosing two items from the refrigerator. How would you describe each item? What sort of food are they? (Meat? Vegetable? Condiment?) Is one older, bigger, softer, smellier, wetter, crunchier, tastier than the other? How are they alike? How are they different?

Prompt: Compare and contrast two items in your refrigerator.

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

How to go deeper: What is the most important way these items are alike? What’s the most important way they are different? (Use the back of this page to write.)