What happened?

Where to start: This year, children are learning narrative writing. To practice this skill, have kids describe an event (or a few loosely linked events), including details in the order they happened, and how it ended. In other words, they tell a story. Start with a conversation about something fun they did recently. It could be something as simple as helping to make dinner or going on a walk.

Prompt: Draw and write about something you did this week that you want to do again.

How to go deeper: To flesh out the details, act out the scene with puppets, dolls, or stuffed animals.